

My Emergency

The essentials on the lock screen — for when someone can't speak for themselves

If someone can't speak for themselves — a fall, a stroke — whoever stops to help picks up a phone that says nothing. My Emergency puts a few lines that matter onto the lock-screen wallpaper: the name, the conditions and allergies a medic needs, and who to call. Readable without unlocking, made right there on the phone.

WHAT IT DOES

- Turns the lock screen into a prompt for help — name, the conditions that matter in an emergency, serious allergies and who to call, readable in seconds without a passcode.
- Made on the device — fill in a few short lines and it draws the wallpaper to set. Nothing you type is uploaded.
- Fill it in on a computer, set it on the phone — a carer types the details on a PC, shows a code to the phone's camera, and they open on the phone ready to save — inside the code, not over the internet.

PRACTICAL

- Free. No sign-up, no account, nothing to buy — it opens in a browser on the phone in hand.
- Works on a phone (fill it in on a computer if that's easier); the saved picture is an ordinary wallpaper.
- A carer or family member sets it up in about five minutes — then it just sits there, doing its job.
- Six languages, and you choose the emergency number for where they live.
- Private by design: nothing you type is uploaded. Once saved, the wallpaper is an ordinary photo, so it may back up to iCloud or Google Photos like any other.

WHAT IT ISN'T

It's a prompt for help, not a medical or safety device. It doesn't summon anyone, and it doesn't replace calling the emergency services, a medical-alert bracelet or the phone's own emergency features — set those up too. And a lock screen isn't private: it shows to anyone who picks the phone up, so keep it to what helps.

WHO IT'S FOR Anyone who spends time alone and might not be able to speak in an emergency — and the families and care teams who'd be the ones called.

If you can't speak for yourself, your phone can still say the few things that matter — on the one screen anyone can see.

OPEN IT, FREE

valoraparentis.com/my-emergency

An early tool, shared openly. If your team helps a resident and family set it up, we'd love to hear what would make it better.

